18. Januar 2010

The Italian transport and logistics enterprise Gruber Logistics, which is headquartered in Auer near Bozen (South Tyrol), recently opened a new branch in Bari in southern Italy. Gruber Logistics, which has been active in the wind energy segment for a while now, works for clients in the renewable energy field in southern Italy. Gruber Logistics has erected approximately 50 MW worth of wind energy facilities this year. The group's Bari branch provides all the specialist equipment that may be needed, as well as warehousing close to the port. The wind energy sector requires close collaboration between wind power plant manufacturers, assembly experts, crane operators and logisticians, which is why Gruber Logistics has stationed engineers with all the necessary know-how in Bari. The firm's new Bari office will also enable Gruber to pursue projects in Greece, Albania and Turkey.
